

"Dedicated to caring for animals and the people who care for them."

Our Services

Animal Wellbeing Assessment

A welfare assessment is a crucial piece of caring for wild animals which covers both the physical and affective states of the animal. But how do I start? What tools do I use, and what data should I collect? Can I really assess animal emotions? We can help you answer these and other questions, and together develop a holistic animal well-being program specific to your animals and institution.

We collaborate with many international animal care professionals and organisations to offer caregivers growth opportunities at workshops and seminars. These events offer caregivers the chance ask questions and learn about topics ranging from animal training to human and animal wellbeing and everything in between, including human-animal relationships.

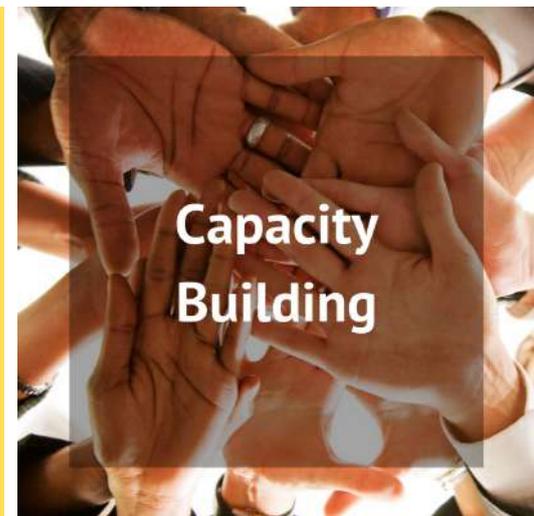

Workshops & Seminars

Accreditation Preparation & Self-Assessment

Do you need an animal wellbeing self-assessment for your institution? Are you preparing for accreditation? Our team knows that the accreditation process can be long and, at times, confusing. We can help you develop a contemporary and holistic self-assessment.

The field of wild animal welfare is continuously growing. With so much new information and research constantly coming out, it can be hard for full-time professionals to stay up-to-date on the best practices for animal care. We can provide a wide variety of capacity building activities for your team to obtain new and improve upon old skills, in topics including animal training, welfare, enrichment, and more.

Capacity Building

Human Wellbeing Programs

Compassion fatigue and emotional burnout are serious issues among those who work with animals. Our team understands the hardships that come with caring for animals, and encouraging human wellbeing is a core aspect of our mission. The animal care profession is rewarding, but it can be very demanding. We strive to support individuals in the challenges they face, and offer programs to help institutions support their staff.

Do you want to make evidence-based decisions, do research on animal wellbeing or the human-animal relationship, or turn your already existing data into peer-reviewed papers? Our team, which has collectively contributed to dozens of publications, can help you with research design and writing.

Research & Collaborations

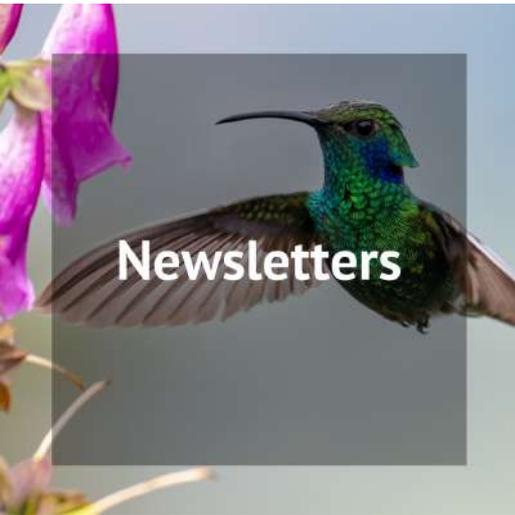

Human-Animal Interactions

How does the relationship between caretakers and their animals impact wellbeing for both? What about visitor encounters? Every interaction between humans and animals can have an effect on welfare, ranging from negative to positive. Our team can help you understand the impact of human interactions on the animals in your care, and help promote positive and engaging relationships for all.

Are you interested in joining the field of wild animal welfare, but don't know how or where to start? Want advice on opportunities to pursue and how to achieve your goals? Whether you are looking to volunteer or make a career, we can use our experience to help you choose your next steps.

Career Coaching

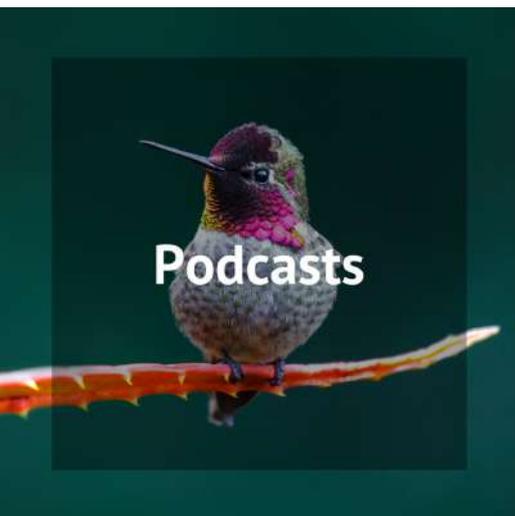

Stay in touch through our newsletter, the Hummingbird Buzz. Once a week we send out a collection of our latest updates – ongoing or upcoming seminars, newly published resources or blogs, new collaborations, and more.

Sign-up through the link below:

Newsletter Sign-up

The blog includes animal and human welfare-related topics. Scroll through our blog where we post our latest news, brief histories and backgrounds, thought pieces, and guest blogs.

COMING SOON: We will soon produce an AnimalConcepts podcast featuring Sabrina Brando. Topics can include animal welfare, training, behaviour, human-animal interactions, and more.

We strive to help our clients as much as possible, which is why we periodically publish downloadable resources for the animal caregiver community. So far we have published materials such as the Wellbeing Atlas Map of Connection, the “On Our Shelf” booklists, and more.

Some of the organisations we have worked with include:

